

“Getting to Outcomes” – A Process

Getting to Outcomes, a guide for putting all of these practices into action, is being adapted to teen pregnancy prevention and will soon be available as a tool for local programmers. There are ten steps to this process which tie together the elements of public health planning in a way that is methodical but not rigid. It is easiest to think of this process circularly where in no single step is independent of another and all can be revisited to make sure that your program remains relevant and sustainable:

More to come on Getting to Outcomes.